When an author is able to invite us into their spiritual journey in such a way that we feel as if we are there with them, it is truly a gift.

Eveline engages us in a way that we walk along side of her as she reveals the beauty of her moments. So few of us really know each other in the truth of who we are as it takes great courage to reveal ourselves. This is what I feel after reading Eveline's book she extended herself to us in great courage.

I believe I was inspired by your book's gardening story! I loooooove that book! Seems I am growing with it and internalizing as I go along. The read has become a process rather than the "quick read" as I thought it would be.

I read the book you left at Starbucks. First, I thought it would take me one or two nights. It is like the movie Avatar you have to see it more than once. Your book needs to be read again and again. I decided to send you this comment because I know I may not have the rest of my life to do so. Thank you for the lessons! You should have another book for other people to read, I am still going over the one you left.

Thank you!

First day, I started read your book, I felt so relived. The beautiful smell of the gardens, flowers, listening to the birds and sound of water of stream... good energy coming through my body. I got very relaxed. Next day, I spent hours to read this book that takes me to a different dimension I have never been but I would like to visit.

This book has a good rhythm, just like I am listening to music. It is very easy to follow. Your book brings me "Good Karma" Thank you for good energy and inspiration.

In the fast pace world of super technology, we must want to slow down and take a look at what we really are and what we are doing. We are constantly being assaulted by media telling us what to do, what to buy, how to have fun and even worse what to think. In the vernacular of today, how does that work for you? I think as people are looking for inspirational literature and Lessons from the Lakeside is a
